

Abstract

A novel technique to quench electrical defects in CVD Al_2O_3 layers is disclosed. A small amount of silicon dopant to the aluminum oxide film reduces the leakage current as well as the gap interface trap density at the dielectric/silicon interface. The implanted 5 silicon gives a better interface and improves the leakage characteristics of the dielectric.